

OVERVIEW

Municipal courts in Mississippi play an integral role in the state's criminal legal system because it is the court tasked with maintaining public safety and ensuring that city and town laws are followed. Increasingly, however, municipal courts use and rely on the revenue collected from fines and fees penalties to help support local and state budgets. And although the municipal courts' reliance on fines and fees revenue is relatively small in Mississippi, its impact is far- reaching.

Fines and fees that are assessed without regard to one's ability to pay have a detrimental impact on people experiencing poverty or people with low incomes. This is because the same financial penalty that trivially inconveniences people with higher incomes can lead to harsher punishment from a person with a lower income by hindering the individual's ability to make rent, buy groceries, or make needed repairs to vehicles for work, for example. Also, across the nation and similar to other parts of the criminal legal system, the collection of fines and fees falls more heavily on Black people and other people of color who are already disproportionately targeted, tried, convicted, and sentenced to harsher penalties for criminal offenses. Even more, a municipality's reliance on fines and fees collections in any form weakens our communities. Years of state divestment and restrictions from the state government in the ways in which local governments can raise revenue have left many of our municipalities, particularly small, rural, majority-minority communities, strapped for cash. As a result, increased fines and fees collected from municipal courts can be an attractive revenue source for local governments seeking to add to the city budget despite the harm caused.

In all, even though the imposition of fines and fees as a penalty for criminal offenses can have serious consequences for people and communities across Mississippi, little data is available to assess the kinds and amount of fines and fees collected in municipal courts across the state and analyze the impact of those collections on municipal budgets. To ensure that Mississippians and communities throughout the state thrive, reforms concerning the ways in which court fines and fees are assessed, collected, and recorded are needed. This requires action from local and state policymakers. More importantly, the reforms must be led by justice-impacted people who are burdened with unnecessary debt in order to raise revenue for municipal and state projects and entities.

FINES AND FEES IN MISSISSIPPI'S MUNICIPAL COURTS

Mississippi law provides that a municipal court be established in all municipalities, defined as the various cities, towns, and villages of this state. In Mississippi, there are 237 municipal courts. The Municipal courts have the authority "to hear and determine, without a jury and without a record of the testimony," all violations of city laws, traffic laws, initial hearings for felony crimes charged within the corporate limits of the municipality, and all other crimes that are deemed to be misdemeanors under state law.³ Most municipal courts have one municipal judge, although a few jurisdictions have several. The municipal judge presides over all cases in the municipal court and sets the punishment for offenders as prescribed by law.⁴ Generally, punishment for violations of municipal ordinances and each violation of state misdemeanor laws includes fines of up to $1,000.00.⁵

According to the American Bar Association, fines are financial penalties that are intended to "deter crime, punish offenders, and compensate victims for losses." For example, fines can be assessed in municipal court for traffic violations like speeding, seatbelt violations, reckless driving, insurance violations, car tag violations, or improper lane use. Other municipal misdemeanor violations like loitering, trespassing, possession of drug paraphernalia, municipal curfew violations, and smoking violations are also subjected to financial penalties in court.

In addition to fines, the courts also assess fees as a result of offense violations. Fees are financial penalties meant to recover the operational and administrative costs of the courts.⁷ The fees assessed can be punitive in nature and are not generally tied to a specific offense.⁸ These fees can include payment plan fees, late payment fees, failure to appear fees, and various other surcharges. Some of the fees assessed by municipal courts as outlined in Mississippi law include the following:

MISSISSIPPI LAW:

- Dismissal of any affidavit, complaint, or charge in municipal court: $ 50.00
- Suspension of a minor's driver's license in lieu of conviction: $ 50.00
- Service of scire facias or return "not found": $ 20.00
- Causing search warrant to issue or causing prosecution without reasonable cause or refusing to cooperate after initiating action: $ 100.00
- Certified copy of the court record: $ 5.00
- Service of arrest warrant for failure to answer a citation or traffic summons: $ 25.00
- Jail cost per day actual jail cost paid by the municipality but not to exceed: $ 35.00
- Service of court documents related to the filing of a petition or issuance of protection from domestic abuse order: $ 25.00
- Any other item of court cost: $ 50.00°

Other court costs outlined by Mississippi law include costs to fund undercover drug investigations, compensate a court employee, purchase or expand municipal court facilities, purchase a computer, bail fees, payment to a constable for service of a warrant, probation programs, including the use of alternative sentencing programs, and house arrest costs administered by private companies.¹⁰

Mississippi law does provide that fines can be paid immediately, in installments as a condition of probation, as a work service project, or any combination of methods.¹¹

A person's failure to pay the fine imposed could result in imprisonment, but state law asserts that imprisonment should not be imposed if the defendant is financially unable to pay the fine upon finding by the court. ¹² Also, a municipality may collect judgments by any means authorized by law, including executing on the personal property of the record title owner, as well as the garnishment of wages, bank accounts, and tax refunds. ¹³

Along with the fines and fees assessed by municipal courts, punishment for violations of municipal ordinances and each violation of state misdemeanor laws can include up to six (6) months imprisonment. The municipal judge also can sentence convicted offenders to work on a public service project "commensurate with the fine and/or incarceration that would have been imposed" as an alternative to the payment of a fine or incarceration.¹⁴

MUNICIPAL COURT FINES AND FEES COLLECTIONS: WHAT WE KNOW

Nationally, by the level of government, municipalities rely more heavily on fines and fees revenues than counties, states, special districts, or school districts. Across the country, these impacts are felt worse in smaller cities than in larger cities. And municipal governments' reliance on fines and fees revenue also seems to be more prevalent in municipalities in rural areas. This pattern is particularly prevalent in the South.

According to data collected by the United States Census Bureau, in Mississippi, local fines and fees revenue generated $77 million based on 2019 data. This equates to $25.8 per capita. Of that total, the state redirected nearly $6 million to the state general fund revenue. This means that local fines and fees revenue represented 1.3% of the state's general fund revenue. In addition, according to 2017 data, local fines and fees revenue represented less than 1% of total local general revenue. Sixteen localities in the state generated fines and fees revenue that totaled 10% or more of their general revenue.

Localities that collected the most fines and fees revenue in 2017 include places with high populations of residents, such as Hinds County, the City of Jackson, and the City of Southaven. ²²

STATE	NAME	LOCAL FINES AND FEES REVENUE (2017, $)	LOCAL FINES AND FEES REVENUE AS A SHARE OF GENERAL REVENUE (%)

Localities that collected the most fines and fees revenue as a share of their localities' general revenue include small, rural municipalities such as Walls, Blue Springs, and State Line.²³

In Mississippi, the municipal clerk is responsible for maintaining permanent dockets and a minute record for all court orders and judgments.²⁴ The clerk also has the responsibility of "administering the collection of all fines, penalties, fees, and costs which are imposed by the municipal court and deposit all collections with the municipal treasurer." ²⁵

However, with respect to Mississippi's current collection processes, data related to criminal fines and fees is not clearly defined. The current line item reported to the state audit by municipalities is defined as fines or fines and forfeiture. Most publicly available data is limited to larger, more urban municipalities. As a result, the limited data make an analysis of the types and amounts of fines and fines collected by each municipality, as well as demographic information detailing the race, sex, and offense of the person of the sentences imposed, impossible.

MISSISSIPPI'S CURRENT COLLECTION PROCESSES:

- There is no uniform municipal court fee schedule or collection practice. Fines and fees collection practices within and across municipal courts are inconsistent, and not all courts actively pursue collections of court costs and fines.
- State law does not require judicial districts to track the amounts of court costs and fines assessed in their districts, nor does state law require municipal courts to track demographic data regarding the individuals sentenced to financial penalties in the court
- Mississippi law does not designate a central oversight entity that monitors performance and provides guidance for collections in municipal courts.

OVERVIEW OF IMPACT

Nationally, the imposition of fines as a financial penalty for legal violations has always existed within the criminal legal system. However, fees have increased and can oftentimes exceed the fines assessed for a particular offense. In Mississippi, although fines and fees collections represent a relatively small percentage of the overall revenue in Mississippi, a municipal court's increased assessment of fines and fees, particularly without regard to the defendant's ability to pay or without alternative sentences, can have a tremendous impact on people experiencing poverty or people with very low incomes, can deepen racial disparities, and can weaken local communities. In the criminal legal system.

POVERTY

Mississippi's poverty rate ranks the highest in the nation, with 18.9% of Mississippians living in poverty.²⁸ And according to the United Way's Mississippi ALICE ("Asset Limited, Income Constrained, Employed") Report, another 31% of Mississippians cannot afford basic household necessities.²⁹ The impact of poverty and income inequities are most felt by Black and other Mississippians of color, as well as women. For instance, in Mississippi, the poverty rate for the state's Black residents is 31%, 24% for Hispanic/Latino residents, and 11% for White residents.³⁰ Mississippi also has one of the highest poverty rates among women.³¹

Poverty plagues every public service matter in the state, including matters concerning the criminal legal system. As a result, one problem with the rising costs and use of fines and fees as penalties for offense violations is that they create a two-tiered system of governance across the state. This is because people experiencing poverty or people with low incomes face harsher treatment than others who commit identical crimes and can afford to pay. For example, people with the resources to make timely payments experience fine-only violations that can be considered costly nuisances at worst. However, people who commit the same act but have less money face very different punishments because of nothing more than their access to extra money. People that do not have access to extra money find themselves in an escalating cycle of court fines and fees collections. This is because late fees and interest can often accumulate when someone is unable to pay their court fines and fees.³² The inability to pay could also lead to an individual's loss of a driver's license, jail time, stigma from their community, and permanent criminal records. The result of this two-tiered system has a lasting impact on individuals, families, and communities.

Pay Traffic Ticket

Payment of Fines

Fines are due IN FULL on the day of sentencing. This will be either the day you plead guilty or the day you may be found guilty. Fines will include the amount assessed by the judge and all applicable state assessments. There is never a fine when you are found not guilty. Any fines not paid after 90 days will be turned over to collections and result in an increase of up to 50% of the amount owed.

All tickets and certain misdemeanor offenses will be reported immediately to the Department of Public Safety.

Every stage of the justice system in the United States, each of which involves varying levels and types of fines and fees, is closely intertwined with racial inequities, be it policing, pretrial, sentencing, parole, or reentry following prison.³³ Nationally, in regard to fines and fees, these racial inequities exist in the context of Black people and other people of color being disproportionately targeted and disproportionately subjected to fines and fees.³⁴ Also, municipalities with larger Black populations tend to rely more heavily on fines and fees revenue. ³⁵ Because we do not have municipal fines and fees revenue collection data aggregated by race, we do not know the extent of the racial disparities that municipal fines and fees collections widen in this state. But given Mississippi's history of preservation, structural racism, and economic oppression, it is very likely that municipal court fines and fees collections are worsening racial disparities in the state.³⁶

What we do know is that nationwide and in Mississippi, mass incarceration has disproportionately impacted Black people and other people of color, immigrants, and people experiencing poverty.³⁷ Currently, Mississippi leads the world with the highest incarceration rate—incarcerating more people per capita than any state in the United States or across the world, including China, Russia, and Iran.³⁸ In 2021, Mississippi incarcerated over 18,000 individuals. Over 60% of those incarcerated are Black, despite Black people representing less than 40% of the state's population.³⁹

Assuming that similar disparities exist in the context of fines and fees collection in Mississippi, the disproportionate impacts of this practice perpetuate and widen historical and generational wealth disparities for communities of color.⁴⁰

COMMUNITY

Municipalities in the state are tasked with education, public safety, and most road and bridge maintenance. Revenue from local (fees for services, utility system rates, and ad valorem taxes), state (sales taxes), and federal sources (federal grants or American Rescue Plan Act funds) help fund municipal governments and the services they provide. But state law provides authority as to the ways in which municipalities can raise revenue.⁴¹

In some cases, revenues may be restricted.⁴² For example, municipalities in Mississippi cannot levy income taxes, limit sales tax rates, and control property tax rates.

Also, in Mississippi, state law also requires that municipalities send the state portions of fines and fees revenue. The money sent to the state from fines and fees revenue fund various programs and are assessed when a court imposes monetary or other penalties on traffic violations, the implied consent law violations, game and fish law violations, littler law violations, trauma traffic violations, and other misdemeanor and some felony convictions. Some state assessments from municipal court fines and fees are optional. For example, a municipality is authorized by state law to assess up to a $1.50 fine for each criminal conviction and civil case in municipal court to fund the county law library. A municipality can collect $2.00 for each criminal misdemeanor conviction to fund the local crime stoppers program. For municipalities with a population of 15,000 or more, the municipality can collect up to $1.00 to fund computerized crime prevention with the police department. ⁴⁵ Some state-imposed fines and penalties are compulsory. For example, a state assessment to assist with the funding of court education in the amount of $.50 is imposed with a criminal conviction if a fine of $10.00 or more is imposed. ⁴⁶

In addition, municipalities' reliance on fines and fees collections as a source of revenue is linked to a broader challenge with the state's tax system.⁴⁷ For instance, one result of Mississippi's regressive tax system is that higher-income residents pay more in state and local taxes than the state's lower-and middle-income residents. Because the state takes more from those who have the least and because of frequent tax breaks for the wealthy and corporations, the state takes in less revenue to fund public services. Lower state revenues require that local governments use more of their local revenue to fill in the gaps to fund crippling public services or find alternative means to raise revenue—like increasing fines and fees collections—to help support the city's budget.⁴⁸

Also, state divestment in public services has negatively impacted communities and hindered the growth of municipalities across the state, particularly in majority Black municipalities like the City of Jackson and more rural communities like the Mississippi Delta or the southwest region of the state in communities like Magnolia, Fayette, and Natchez.

Some of this is evident across broad-based public services like education, healthcare, and infrastructure. For example, Since its inception, the Mississippi Adequate Education Program (MAEP), a funding formula set by state law to determine the amount of funding the state should provide each public school district in order to meet academic standards established by the Mississippi State Board of Education, has only been fully funded twice since its inception in 2008. Since the MAEP's inception, Mississippi's public schools have been underfunded by over $3.3 billion. For the 2022-2023 school year, Mississippi's public schools are underfunded by over $279 million.

Also, currently, there are over 100,000 uninsured adults in Mississippi with incomes below the poverty line who are caught in the Medicaid "coverage gap" and who would be eligible for Medicaid if the state were to expand its Medicaid program.⁴⁹ However, Mississippi is one of eleven states that has not yet expanded Medicaid. ⁵⁰ In addition, as of January 28, of the state's rural hospitals are at risk of closing, including 19 that face immediate risk of closure.⁵¹

Not to mention, the willful neglect of water and sewer systems in municipalities across the state is another example of the impact of state divestment on local communities. Most recently, the City of Jackson received assistance from the federal government to repair and rebuild the city's water system.⁵² Still, drinking water contamination in rural wells and pollution from leaking sewer mains and rural septic tanks across the state has only recently been addressed using federal pandemic relief aid funds.⁵³

FINES AND FEES REFORMS IN MISSISSIPPI

Across the nation, state reforms to improve municipal fines and fees collections include repealing driver's licenses suspensions and reinstating licenses for unpaid debt, eliminating juvenile justice fees, eliminating fees in the adult criminal legal system, creating payment plans for people with lower ability to pay, and decriminalizing minor traffic violations and arrests as collections tools.⁵⁴

Some reforms have also occurred in Mississippi. In 2017, following litigation by the ACLU, the MacArthur Justice Center, and the Southern Poverty Law Center challenging debtor's prisons in Biloxi, Jackson, and Corinth, the Mississippi Supreme Court made two changes related to fines and fees in its Rules of Criminal Procedure. These rules were later codified in Mississippi state law HB 387: An Act to Provide that Incarceration Shall Not Automatically Follow the Nonpayment of a Fine, Restitution, or Court Costs. Its provisions are nearly identical: it mandates a determination of willfulness before a court may sanction a defendant for nonpayment of fines and fees and provides alternatives for courts when failure to pay was not willful.

Also, the Mississippi Department of Public Safety adopted Mississippi's Criminal Justice Reform Act which ended driver's license suspension for failure to pay fines and fees, formalizing a January 2017 Mississippi Department of Public Safety discretionary policy change that aimed to end this practice. The legislation also provided that people under probation or parole supervision shall not be denied earned-discharge credits, which can reduce the probation or parole time because they failed to pay fines or fees, or if a financial hardship waiver was granted.

Similarly, some cities across the state, including the City of Jackson, Meridian, Yazoo, Gautier, Moss Point, Gulfport, and others, have amnesty days that give people the opportunity to pay traffic tickets, some misdemeanor cases, including DUIs and municipal ordinance offenses, without late fees.⁵⁶

CONCLUSION AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Municipal court fines and fees collections in Mississippi can perpetuate cycles of poverty, widen race inequities, and weaken communities when those collections are taken from people without the ability to afford financial penalties assessed to them. Some reforms to these collections must occur at the state level. Too, municipalities across the state can take immediate forward-looking steps to lessen the harm that these financial penalties can cause.

First, a unified assessment of municipal court policies and procedures regarding fines and fees collections would help provide data transparency, improve public trust, and create a consistent standard assessment of financial penalties across the state. To support this idea, all municipal courts should make publicly available the amount of fines and fees assessed by the court delineated by the sentence imposed and demographic information of those sentenced to the financial penalty. Additionally, to better assess the collection of fines and fees revenue in Mississippi's municipal courts, the following should be considered:

RECOMMEDATIONS FOR MISSISSIPPI'S MUNICIPAL COURTS:

- Municipal Clerks should actively ensure circuit, county, and justice courts are submitting all assessment fees collected during the month in order to comply with Miss. Code Ann. §99-19-73, which includes following the guidelines established by the Office of the State Auditor in the Court Assessment Guide.
- The Department of Finance and Administration should actively ensure counties have submitted monthly assessment fees as required to remit these payments to the State Treasurer per Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19- 73 (11).
- The Mississippi Judicial College should update the Handbook for Mississippi Municipal Court Clerks to include training on Miss. Code Ann. § 99-19-73 as it generally applies to the submission of court assessment fees, as well as the Court Assessment Guide established by the Office of the State Auditor per statute.⁵⁷
- The Mississippi Legislature should reform or repeal restrictions on local government revenue-raising.⁵⁸
- The Mississippi Legislature should fund courts and other parts of the criminal legal system from state general funds rather than on fees collected from defendants within the system.⁵⁹

Moreover, to ensure that fines and fees collections are not creating a more unjust system of justice by increasing poverty, deepening race inequities, and weakening communities across the state, reforms to municipal courts' fines and fees revenue collections should include the following:

RECOMMEDATIONS FOR MISSISSIPPI'S MUNICIPAL COURTS:

- Fines and fees assessments based on the ability to pay to determine realistically payable penalties and payment schedules.⁶⁰
- Increased opportunities for community services in lieu of financial penalties for those unable to pay.
- Decreased penalties for transportation violations such as parking tickets, speeding, and traffic-related offenses that disproportionately impact Blacks and other people of color. ⁶¹
- The prohibition of incarceration as a punishment for nonpayment of fines and fees. 62

No matter the choice or method of reform, community input and the voices of impacted people are key to ensuring that municipal court fines and fees are not doing more to harm people and communities in the state and to ensuring a better future in Mississippi for all of us

One Voice administered the following survey as a method to provide a voice to Mississippians impacted by court debt, fines, and fees. The survey was first administered and overseen by Leah Nelson of Alabama Appleseed, Tari Williams of Greater Birmingham Ministries, and the staff of Legal Services of Alabama, especially Jae Pickett and Desiree Taylor. Assistance in the first survey was provided by Dana Sweeney and intern Alexis Nail of Alabama Appleseed. One Voice thanks Alabama Appleseed for the use of the survey and hopes to continue to collect and share the stories of Mississippians impacted by the legal system with the support of partner organizations.

SURVEY NARRATIVES

No one should have to choose between paying a traffic fine and paying for groceries. A 36-year- old Black male was threatened with jail time and had the amount he owed in fines and fees ncrease because of his failure to pay. He has had to choose between paying for groceries, utilities, rent, and medical bills to pay back court fines and fees. He has accepted help for things like utilities from a faith-based organization, borrowed money from family, and even taken out a payday loan because he did not have money after paying your court costs, fines, and fees.

No one should become trapped in an endless cycle of financial distress because of court fines and fees. A 40-year-old African-American proud homeowner acknowledges she violated a traffic law, but since then, it has caused a 15-year cycle that still has not ended. She paid the traffic ticket but did not go to court on her scheduled court date. The court issued a $3,000 failure to appear fine, resulting in her arrest multiple times and suspension of her driver's license. The woman still owes several thousand dollars in court costs, fines, and fees.

Family members have to come to the rescue of other family members who are taxed by the courts and cannot afford fines and fees payments rather than risk suspension of their loved one's driver's license or jail time. One 61-year-old has paid over $3,000 in court fines and fees to help a family member with court payments.

Mississippians should not have to live in a system that forces people to choose between paying for basic necessities like food and paying their court debt. However, a 24-year-old college student from Jackson admits to not being able to buy groceries to pay the court fines and fees she owed. Community service was not offered to this student instead of paying the court fines and fees that her collegiate budget couldn't afford.

36 Attorney General opinion highlighted efforts to circumvent the separation of powers: A municipal court judge is a member of the judicial branch of government and, therefore, would be prohibited from serving as: • a municipal code enforcement officer. See Op. Atty. Gen. O'Reilly-Evans, December 27, 2011 ("[A]n individual serving as the Municipal Code Enforcement Officer, Zoning Administrator and Building and Permit Official, would, by operation of law, vacate those positions upon taking the oath of office of justice court judge."). • a police department investigator. See Op. Atty. Gen. Yarborough, July 20, 2011 ("If the [police department] investigator is elected to the office of justice court judge and takes the oath of office he, by operation of law, vacates his position of investigator."). • a county prosecutor. See Op. Atty. Gen. Ready, August 8, 2005 ("It would be a violation of the separation of powers doctrine . . . for a county prosecuting attorney to simultaneously serve as a municipal court judge,"). • a county attorney.
